95th YEAR, No. 169

The warning comes after a 15-year-old Duncan girl slipped through the ice on a lake near Duncan Friday.

Karen Barbara Yates is missing and presumed drowned after she fell through ice while skating on Quamichan Lake.

Two companions, Ronnie Olson and Leonard Thew, both 14, narrowly escaped the same fate.

The tragedy is the first directly related to the bitterly-cold snap which has gripped the Island causing temperatures to plummet and bringing record demand for electricity south of the border.

A weather spokesman said today there's no relief in sight with snow and continu-ing cold forecast over the holiday period.

A Duncan RCMP spokesman said police divers, ex-perienced in working under ice, were expected to arrive today from Vancouver to try and recover the girl's body. The search area, between 300 to 400 yards off shore, was marked off with a red dye by helicopter Friday when rescuers tried unsuccessfully to reach the scene

Police said the Olson boy threw his hockey stick to Karen who grabbed it and used it as a balance to pull herself out of the water.

The boy told police Karen tried three or four times to climb out but the ice kept breaking under her weight.

The 2,290-ton Huey Fong with 2,700 Vietnamese refugees has been anchored outside Hong Kong harbor since last Saturday. Hong Kong has denied the ship permission to dock, saying the vessel's intended port-of-call was Taiwan, not Hong

Many of the refugees are ethnic Chinese who have in recent fled Vietnam in recent months because of the current dispute between China and Vietnam. When to Retire?

How old is too old to work? Sixty-five? Fifty? Seventy-eight? The question is being discussed these days by Sen. David Croll's special Senate committee on national age retirement policies, and the answers he's getting seem to be as different as the two million Canadians officially classed as el-

The senator himself is an avowed opponent of a fixed retirement age, understandably. At 78, he is still going strong. Since his apointment to what is usually considered a quiet old age in the Senate, Croll has accomplished more than some men do at half his

"I sometimes think it inconceivable that Canada have one retirement age for everybody." said Croll recently. He thinks his commitee's work has struck a reletters (mostly from the elderly, he thinks to judge from the spidery handwriting) have been flowing in, and on radio talk shows he gets lots of calls from the old. It is the senator's belief that as inflation continues to nibble away at people's pensions and as the life expectancy rises still higher, Canada will become top heavy with poor, idle elderly people. There won't be enough workers under 65 to support them.

Thus his promotion of the abolition of fixed retirement dates.

The opposite viewpoint was expressed to the Croll committee by Royal Bank chairman Earle McLaughlin, who is a vigorous 63 years old but who plans nonetheless to step down in two more years. He pointed out that a man near the top of the executive ladder refusing retirement at the usual time freezes everyone else below him in position. It causes stagnation in a company, and at the bottom, new people find it difficult to gain entry to the busi-

The Canadian Labor Congress decided not to appear before Croll's committee. CLC chairman Dennis McDermott says, however, that the congress opposes any attempts to eliminate mandatory retirement at 65. It opens up jobs for young people, he said.

Mandatory retirement is not sponsive chord in Canada. Many 11 Care Lacemic issue which it might appear - in the United States, legislation becomes effective next year abolishing mandatory retirement in the civil service and raising it to 70, with a few exceptions, in the private sector as well. Its effects will vary from industry to corporation to government. Statistics Canada discovered last year that 16 per cent of men 65 and over were still working. Croll estimates that between 15 and 20 per cent of retiring workers would prefer to keep on working, although some of the witnesses appearing before his committee have said it might be as high as 60 per cent in the skilled trades and as low as five per cent on the automobile assembly lines. (The automobile industry is where the "30-and-out" retirement movement originated. It means with 30 years service you can leave work with full pension rights - even if you are only 50 years old.)

In Canada, Croll's committee is publicizing the issue and the Ontario human rights commission has recommended that the province study the whole question. It is ironic that while compulsory retirement is under attack a country with the unemployed numbering in the hundreds of thousands, in Europe the trend is in the opposite direction.

Italians retire at 60 and unions want that lowered to 55, while in France the government offers 70 per cent of a worker's pay if he retires at 60; at 65 he collects his full pension. In the rest of Europe, it's 65 or earlier.

If the shortage of skilled labor predicted for Canada in the 1980s by the federal government materializes, we may have to turn to those who have spent 65 years acquiring a whole range of skills and experience. But there will still probably be a majority of the elderly who prefer to hang "gone fishing" signs on their door on

PQ Kept Head Down in '78

1978 in Quebec is how the Parti Quebecois administration reversed a potentially disastrous slide in popularity by becoming a "conservative" govern

What a difference a year can make in the fortunes of a government! The year 1977 was a turbulent one in bec politics as the newly-elected PQ government affirmed its separatist intentions by enacting tough lan-guage legislation and skirmishing constantly with Ottawa.

The Quebec crisis was in the headlines of newspapers across the country, the Quebec economy began to suffer and by year's end Rene Levesque's government was heading into a tailspin in popularity.

But the story took a different turn in 1978. Displaying a new sense of political pragmatism, the Levesque government toned down its separatist rhetoric, stopped fighting with Ottawa and concentrated on nuts-and-bolts legislative reforms

Passed the Liberals

The result is that the PQ has wiped out the seven percentage point lead the Quebec Liberal party held over it in the polls last spring. And even more encouraging for the government in the polls is that a clear majority of Quebecers is now satisfied with the government's performance.

After passing many major pieces of legislation in 1977 such as the French language charter, the new state-run automobile insurance plan and a bill reforming political party financing, the government slowed down the pace of reform this year.

Some controversial legislation left over from the previous year was adopted — such as a bill rigorously controlling spending and organization in referendum campaigns and a law setting up a provincial crown corporation in the asbestos business.

But the only major pieces of legislation to be introduced this year were a ough consumer protection code and a bill to protect Quebec farmland from urban development.

Quebec displayed a greater willingness to co-operate with Ottawa at the eral-provincial conferences, although disputes between the two governments were not entirely eliminated.

The first clash came over Quebec's Keable commission into illegal RCMP activities in the province. Ottawa obtained a court order shutting down the commission on constitutional grounds last February after Jean Keable started probing into federal political deci-

The supreme court recently upheld the ruling but the commission will be allowed to continue investigating police activities outside federal jurisdic

Another major dispute came over Ottawa's decision in last spring's budget to subsidize temporary cuts in provincial sales tax. Quebec refused to participate in the plan for across-theboard sales tax cuts of three per cent for six months because it felt the cuts would not benefit key sectors of the Quebec economy.

RENE LEVESQUE .. became pragmatic

Instead, Quebec Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau responded boldly by completely abolishing the eight per cent provincial sales tax for one year on textiles, clothing, furniture and

The move caught the imagination of the Quebec public who supported Parizeau's bid to have Ottawa subsidize the plan. Federal Finance Minister Jean Chretien got himself out of a difficult situation by mailing direct rebates of $85 to Quebec taxpayers as compensation for the sales tax program in other provinces.

The PQ's sales tax plan is being credited in large part for the strong growth in the Quebec manufacturing sector in 1978. Coupled with a decline in the Canadian dollar that has made Quebec products even cheaper than foreign imports, the cuts spurred new demand for clothing, textiles, shoes

Other manufacturing sectors such pulp and paper, wood and always products and chemicals performed strongly, contributing to creation of 8,000 new manufacturing jobs. Exports of manufactured goods and investment in new plans and equipment both rose by 20 per cent over

But there was little good news out of the Montreal economy, where head office departures continued and construction slowed to a near standstill.
Political uncertainty over the PQ's goal of "sovereignty-association" creased this year as Premier Levesque and his cabinet ministers of-fered all sorts of contradictory explanations for the conept.

In what appears to be a more moderate position, the government is likely to seek a simple mandale for negotiations with Ottawa in the referendum promised for late 1979 or early 1980. Polls have shown the PQ could win with such a question.

Return to Confrontation

But the almost deliberate confusion sown by PQ officials on the issue has authority of the PQ. The party risks losing the confidence of those who respect a forthright and honest approach to the independence goal.

Some observers interpret the PQ strategy as one of lulling English Canada to sleep over the national unity issue and provoking the defeat of Prime Minister Trudeau - the PQ's main adversary - in next year's fed-

Meanwhile, the jury is still out on the much-heralded leader of the Que-

Magic-think is one of the most dangerous phenomena in our country and our community today.

In part it is dangerous because it is an attitude and mind-set of the ordinary man, not just of the ordinary man, not just of the politicians (from whom everyone expects the worst anyway). Although magic-think has been adopted by many politicians—California Governor Jerry Brown and B.C. Tory, leader Vis Steat and B.C. Tory leader Vic Stephens being a couple that spring immedi-ately to mind — its origins do not lie with elected officials but rather with the average person who finds it impossible to cope rationally with the mass of troubles affecting him.

Feeling powerless to combat the apparently relentless negative forces ranged against him, the frustrated citizen turns to simplistic answers because they seem to be within his reach, because any answers are better than Regrettably, this sort of thinking on the part of the citizens encourages the politicians also to turn to simplistic answers, to promise their electorates the moon in neat wedge-shaped pieces on a platinum platter.

The people believe the promises because they want to believe them. Vic Stephens will doubtless gain thousands of votes with his wildly impractical ideas for eliminating sales taxes and school property taxes. Joe Clark will capture the vote of English Canadians with his promises — almost certainly not to be fulfilled — of deregulation tions imposed by reality, be that reality political, economic or even physical. Despite on the power in California only by jump-ing on the tax revolt bandwagon which he had originally - and logically -

Perhaps more seriously and more importantly, magic thinking is danger-ous because it prevents us from developing realistic ways of coping with the severe problems facing us.

As long as we allow ourselves to believe that we can cut taxes without cutting government services, we will never develop ways of having the com-munity use its resources to solve some problems without calling on the government. As long as we allow ourselves to believe that some magic solution will be found to the energy crisis before we actually run out of petroleum, we will never apply ourselves seriously to the problems of energy conservation or alternative energy sources. As long as we allow ourselves to believe that Canadian economic problems will be solved by replacing Pierre Trudeau with Joe Clark, we will never look seriously at the sacrifices individual Canadians may have to make to keep our economy from sink. make to keep our economy from sinking into the mire of stagflation.

As long as we allow ourselves to believe that industrial development is needed in Greater Victoria but not in our neighborhood, we will never make a logical decision on where the industry can most reasonably go

The examples are legion.

If we each make just one resolution for 1979, let it be this: We resolve to look as realistically as we can at our own situation, at that of our community and our country, recognizing at all times that there are no easy or simplistic solutions to many of our diffi

We find them interesting not because we think they were freaks but because we think they may be repre-sentative of a great many other Americans who would welcome the opportunity to dedicate themselves to a cause. The power that Jim Jones achieved over them did not emanate from him. It came, we think, from their desire to endow him with qualities deserving of the sacrifice they were prepared to make.

As everyone knows, new religious movements - or "cults", to use the pejora-tive word — have enjoyed great success in recent years in attracting adherents. While the doctrines preached by these move-ments are indeed strange to us, their appeal does not seem very mystifying. It appears to lie in the intense commitment and sacrifices they demand from their adherents at a moment when other causes that impose high demands. If the parents of those joining these move-ments revile their faiths or threaten them with depro-gramming, that may even intensify the attraction. Cynical

The late 1950s resembled the late 1970s in lacking good eauses in which young Americans saw opportuni-ties to join with one another in making sacrifices. Per-haps that is why the response was so immediate and enthusiastic in 1960 when John F. Kennedy proposed the Peace Corps in the course of his campaign to be president. We do not suggest that the time has come to revive that idea. For good reason, Americans have be come cynical about causes their government might es pouse. But we miss any discussion of ways to attract to good causes those Ameri-cans who seek the fulfill-ment they derive from joining together and making sacrifices. We say this, not because we are ready with our own five or ten-point program to propose, but be-cause we think some good might yet come out of the events in Guyana if we exa-mined how to appeal to the movement that seems to be out there waiting for a good cause. Those who went to Guyana and died there seem to have thought that preferable to the other ways they could have spent their lives. Only the likes of the Reverend Jones and the Reverend Moon have understood and appealed to their need to sacrifice. Is there no one

Even more disturbingly, the black-market in rarities is flourishing as never before in Europe, patronized not only by collectors but by Dedicated 'tickers', like pop fans, can turn quite nasty if disappointed; determined 'birders' have been known to stone an exhausted vagrant which refused to rise and be ticked. A rare plant, if not actually trampled to death in the rush to examine and photograph it, may be left to die without a blade of protective vegetation, while unscrupulous scientists have even been caught redhanded with a trowel.

You can accuse me of rushing the season if you want — and I'll gladly plead guilty to the count — but once Christmas is behind me, and I've got a strangle-hold on New Years, I get to thinking about spring.

This year I'm rushing the season a little more than usual. Here it is barely New Years and already my thoughts are turning vernal. Fortunately, I can claim an excuse - a white feather.

It was Boxing Day, one of those rare Boxing Days where sun and temperatures combine to create a singularly unwinter-like day. I was in the garden making desultory swipes with a hoe at those weeds that seem to do particularly well in our wet sunless winters. seem to do particularly well in our wet sunless winters. I'd almost decided this was a job to be left for another day when I noticed the feather. It was white, stuck to a tiny opening in the gable of the garage, and was fluttering slightly in the gentle breeze.

Suddenly it was high summer again. The sight of suddenly it was nigh summer again. The sight of that feather took me back to June when the morning air around the house sparkled with darting, dashing, swerving and twittering Violet-green Swallows. A pair had set up house in that gable and, from my recollection, had newly-hatched young in their nest—at least that's what I guessed from the commodion the swallows. that's what I guessed from the commotion the swallows Swallows from nests all over the district seemed to have gathered on the wires in the yard to discuss the blessed event. There was great excitement and much coming and going. But eventually the novelty apparently wore off. Soon only the resident pair remained and for the next two or three weeks they maintained a constant flow of insects to their rapidly growing young inside the gable of that garge. inside the gable of that garage.

I remember once, during a particularly warm spell, thinking that the heat in their little home would be more than the youngsters could take. My fears were groundless; by the middle of July four young swallows — near copies of their parents — were on the wing.

For a few more days they returned to the nest hole every evening. But one day, near the end of July, the swallows left. Since then their nest hole has been ignored by all but a passing nuthatch which, back in November, took a perfunctory look at it.

Since then I too have ignored the nest hole, that is until Boxing Day and the timely intervention of that feather. Now I find myself wondering what has become of the little family since they stopped sharing the Hosford backyard with that lackadaisical gardener.

If we turn to the "book" on Violet-green Swallows we can answer some of the questions that arise from such musings. For example, we can assume that those of the family that are still alive — and the odds are very long against all of them having survived the hazards of early life and migration. early life and migration — are probably winging over the lagoons and estuaries of Mexico and Central Ameri-ca. We can guess, too, that they got there by following the Pacific Coast all the way, feeding as they went.

One thing we can be sure of is that, now that the sun has ended its plunge towards the southern horizon and is beginning its slow progress north again, the swallows will be preparing for their journey north.

Their great journey lies months away but already, with the lengthening days, slight but perceptible changes within their bodies are signalling to the swallows that the time to leave their winter home is

It is rather pleasant to think that, somewhere over the jungles of Mexico or Central America, two Violet-green Swallows — probably unaware of each other's existence at this time — will, after a long and arduous journey north, come together in a little backyard on southern Vancouver Island and, in a hole in the gable of a garage, help to perpetuate their kind.

If they do, they've already got one white feather for

Another Chance to Unknit Tangled IOS Threads

Five years after IOS Ltd. collapsed in a heap of financial rubble and scandal, a team of lawyers and ac-countants is still unravelling the saga of the New Bruns-wick-based mutual fund company that at its peak controlled more than $2 billion in investments around the world.

The next chapter is due to unfold in the New Brunswick Supreme Court Tuesday in the form of an agreement between IOS Ltd., the nowdefunct Bahamas Common-wealth Bank and others.

The complex agreement is to settle a dispute over $2.5 million in promissory notes signed by a company in the Dutch Antilles, VCL Curacao N.V., to IOS Insurance Holdings Ltd.

The Dutch company was part of an elaborate corporate network assembled by Robert Vesco, who while controlling IOS Ltd. looted it of hundreds of millions of dollars in assets.

Making sense of the maze of companies and restoring to shareholders around the world some of their invest-ment now is the task of two court-appointed liquiators,

Mr. Ray Rock, C.I.B.

For example, $5 million in tentatively scheduled payments from one former Vesco company, International Controls Corp., won't be completed for another four verse. four years.

Page also said IOS is still in the midst of a number of egal battles. In one case the liquidators still are trying to have a 1975 decision by a New Jersey court awarding IOS $5.5 million recognized in Bahamian courts.

It is still unclear how much IOS investors actually lost. At its height, the mutual fund had about 250,000 investors, Page said, but some got out early before the stock collapsed. The losses also would depend on

Sof far, Page told the Canadian Press in an interview, substantially more than $100 has been returned to shareholders. But the job is still far from complete,

CLUES ACROSS

6. CONFECTION not connection. A CONFECTION is simply and essentially "something made" (to "confect" meaning to "make"). The clue is less perfect n summing up the essence of "connection.

7. NEW not few. Personal recommendation may bring him some NEW clients, of course, it is less apt to remark that it may bring him only few (as if it should bring him many).

9. DENIAL not menial. A menial, as such, has no business to be in the least curt or snappish. A DENIAL, rather should not be "unduly" so. 10. RAT, not ram. Ram (male sheep) is unsuitably specific in this case. 12. WILY not wild. The idea of an insincere apology has cynical or calculating overtones, thus linking up better with WILY. A man may well quite sincerely regret a wild accusation.

14. HATE not fate. "Inexorable cruelty" suggests an implacable desire to inflict suffering; this means HATE rather than fate, seen as just a blind sort of

15. FLEW not blew. A kite is understood to fly, rather than to blow.

16. TELL not sell. Eagerness to sell is hardly a matter of being "helpful;" also, it is not especially to the "novice" that he will want to sell materials, tools, etc. The answer "TELL" is better in line with the spirit of the clue

17. SONS not song. A song is simply understood to be a religious one, rather than "very religious" in its nature; also, merely being religious doesn't tend to make it a good song.

21. PLAYER not prayer. Those in the main roles of a sacred pageant are bound to make even a more sacred pageant are bound to make even a more lasting impression than a prayer. BOX not boo or bow. The idea of a theatre BOX is fully apt. To boo, or to bow, is something a person may do, on occasions, at the theatre or elsewhere; it isn't solidly linked with the theatre as a building or inclination. institution.

CLUES DOWN

1. POWER not rower. Highly developed arms — sophisticated weapons — bring military strength, of course; but one may doubt if a rower's muscular arms actually bring him strength.

2. HEAR not wear. There are things (e.g., particularly attractive pieces of music) one doesn't tire of HEARing. Wear is less apt, since generally one tends to wear things as long as they are respectable, fashionable, etc., it's not so much a question of inclination due to not being tired of them yet.

3. TIME not dime. The style of phrasing: "hasn't got TIME for" is very apt. A man will say (for instance) they'll never get a dime out of him which will have the style of the st they'll never get a dime out of him, rather than that he "hasn't got a dime" for any of them.

5. DUEL not dull. A DUEL scene, as such, yes; but it's

Here's What Will Happen On Moresby

ALTHOUGH the details have yet to be worked out, there can be no doubt the fate of the proposed South Moresby Wilderness Area in the Queen Charlottes is

The future calls for log-ging, with pocket areas of wilderness preserved either as ecological reserves or provincial parkland.

There will never be a South Moresby Wilderness Area. There will never be a World Heritage Natural Site

In the environmentalist's world South Moresby has become an issue of international reputation.

No one has a crystal ball. but by conducting more than a dozen interviews with politicians, public servants, bureaucrats and private citizens from Queen Charlotte City, to Calgary and Ottawa it has been possible to patch versy ogether a sketch of what likely awaits the area. Some of the important points to emerge from the interviews are that:

For the past year the main thrust has been for public hearings on the matter, but Forests Minister Tom Wa-terland confirmed last week that such hearings are not in the cards for the Moresby

In an interview from Queen Charlotte City Jim Hart, habitat protection fi-sheries officer for the Is-lands, says that if logging proceeds in the Moresby region it will undoubtedly spell destruction for salmon streams.

Hart says that Rayonier's initial foray into the region, on Lyell Island, has already caused severe environmental problems — and the touchy terrain is yet to Hart says twice he's investigated logging practices on Lyell and found them wanting.

Timber, he says, has been felled across small streams that are important spawning and rearing habitat for coho in the Sandy Creek watershed. When the trees are dragged out of the water they rake the bottom, destroying eggs or young fish.

No charges have been laid many charges to deal with up here that I'm sticking only to the most straight forward . . . besides, I didn't think charges were warrant-ed because the issue is a little cloudy

Hart said Rayonier ap-parently thought it was fol-lowing acceptable logging practices because in an early visit to the cutting area he'd said the operation looked acceptable.

"But at that time I didn't see what was happening just around the next bend." Hart added that he is worried about what will happen when logging takes place deeper in the Moresby wil-"I'm really concerned about logging in the steep

The report states: "As a result of the combination of physical factors, including extremes of rainfall intensity, high winds, duration and average yearly totals, rapid weathering, steep slopes, high seismic activity and geological character, large tracts of the islands are naturally extremely unstable . . . ")

Hart says he's transmitted his concerns about such matters to the Environment and Land-Use Committee and now he will wait to see what happens.

One party that's shown interest in the Moresby proposal but has since backed out is Fitness and Sport Min-ister Campagnolo, MP for Skeena.

She toured the area last fall and wrote Waterland and Premier Bill Bennett urging a public hearing.
In mid-December Cam-pagnolo finally got a reply from Waterland pointing out that under Bill 14, the Forest Act, no public hearing is

A spokesman for Campagnolo said his minister felt strongly about the Moresby issue, "but she feels she can't push much further without encroaching on pro-vincial jurisdictions, which is a touchy matter."

Parks Canada has also taken a hands-off position.
The federal parks department has identified the re-gion as worthy of protection, but that's as far as it's prepared to go.

The federal department says the Moresby region is in a class by itself ("The exceptionally high energy coastline there is unique in the region and in Canada.")

—but it can do no more than encourage others to protect

Explains Dave Street from his Calgary office: "Unless we own the land there's nothing we can do. We don't have the budget."

Street, assistant director for Parks Canada's western region, says: "We're not doing anything about Moresby right now and I think it's a very, very low

So what it comes down to is this — the provincial gov-ernment's internal resource agencies will meet around a table and haggle over the trade-offs.

Waterland says public input is welcome, of course, but he stresses that there's a big difference between input and hearings

"The experience I've had with public hearings is that there's too much emotion and not enough factual dialogue. There's nothing to be gained by having people standing there screaming at one another," he says.

So the IPC, the well-organized, vociferous, publicityconscious environmental group that brought the South Moresby Wilderness Pro-posal to the forefront, will be left out in the cold.

And that is as the govern ment always intended — the fate of the Moresby wilder-ness is to be decided with a shuffling of paper across a boardroom table.

A footnote: representatives of the IPC say they don't know what action to take now, but something will be done.

We're not finished yet. After all this time and strug-gle we aren't going to just roll over and die."

Max Was Man Of Many Parts In Fading Year

Mike Toakley shook off handicap.

Burned-out Holts . . . they built home a third time.

So 1978 has all but gone and as it fades I start to reflect and what is mirrored most is the feeling that this was the year I was called things.

I was a sourpuss in the summer for refusing to wear a "We Have a Super Smile For You" button and for not joining the then tourism minister Grace McCarthy at the Inner Harbor to grin at visitors as they arrived from the States.

In early December I was a Scrooge for keeping thousands of Victoria children from seeing the Ice Capades show — all because (so said the company) of a column I wrote criticizing it a year before.

And more recently I was a Grinch for suggesting the spirit of Christmas should be spread throughout the year instead of being concentrated on one hectic

Oh well, never mind. It all shows, at least, that someone out there is still reading and reacting and that's what it's all about. And in between the names there were many other things in 1978 — new people I met and heartening stories I heard - that made it all

Like young Mike Toakley, the high school kid who couldn't walk for four years of his life, then had to wear braces and use crutches because of a bone disease, but became an excellent high jumper. And a soccer player and many other things including a fine young man with enough inside to be able to say that all the credit goes to his parents for encourag-

And like Jim Holt and his wife Daphne whose perseverence and philosophy enabled them to rebuild their home in the rugged Highlands area just out of Victoria after being burned out twice in the Undaunted by the ashes and the memories that lay in them, Jim took apart two old buildings — a store in Sidney and a barn in Langford — and built a third home where the last one had stood.

"We still have a lot of finishing to do, of course. but we've rebuilt and moved in," Jim told me happily the other day.

And did he have any words of wisdom for

"Yes," Jim said with a grin. "Have fire insurance — it makes life easier!"

Not all the stories I did in 1978 were heartening of course. There was a struggle through a long hot summer and a beer strike, which certainly don't go hand in hand. And there was the disturbing series I wrote on teenage girls running away from home. That series brought in as much mail as my Smiling Grace column and one on Murray Mackay being appointed western rep for the big Christie's auction

So smiles, teenagers and antiques finished in a three-way tie as far as interest was concerned, confirming what we'd always suspected: there are a lot of relics in Victoria.

lot of relics in Victoria.

There were several fun stories for me, too, in 1978 like the four-day trip I made to the remote island of Bella Bella with a group of school kids. Like joining the often-hassled nude swimmers for a dip in the buff at Prior Lake. And, most important of all, becoming a Canadian citizen in July.

For happy endings — or happy continuings, really — my favorite has to be the reaction from all sorts of people to my column on the Good Sherherd Shelter in Mill Bay. People like Eleanor Hazlehurst and Rita Gregory, the two Victoria women who were so concerned at the Shelter's sorry financial plight that they held three days of garage sales and raised $860 to help the animals.

Still, despite being called a sourpuss and know-

Still, despite being called a sourpuss and knowing how much Victoria people love to smile at anything that moves, I'm going to stick my neck out again and say I thought my best column in this past year was my criticism of the provincial Super Smile campaign. Some readers felt so, too.

One woman was so tickled by it she said she was sending a clipping to Toronto friends "so they can smile, too." And my friend-by-mail Bette Morrison congratulated me for "scoring a hit" and told of a run-in she'd just had with tourists.

After watching many break local laws at random, Bette finally screwed up enough courage to ask the male member of a family that was crossing the street on a Don't Walk sign if he'd do that at home.

"One of the little darlings spoke up when I was a few feet (I hate metric) away," Bette explained, and wanted to know if Daddy was going to smash

Anyway, that's it for 1978 and I believe, if mankind is to keep on dreaming, when approaching a New Year we must do it with confidence that no matter how things have been they will get bet-

Real Power Under the Hood for Kremlin Bosses

At the pinnacle is the Zil, a handsome limousine that is handmade—reportedly no more than 50 a year—at a local truck factory. At last report, about a thousand Chaikas were being built annually, and there are now two very different models on the streets.

The Chaika I, produced between 1959 and 1977, resembles a late 1950 Oldsmobile sedan, loaded with chrome and sporting prominent tail

Chaika II, the successor unveiled last year, has the sophisticated hori-zontal lines and understated use of chrome of late-model Western luxury cars. Twenty feet long and five feet high, the Chaika II can carry up to seven persons and has a tape deck and air conditioning as standard equipment. HYDE PARK, N.Y Burt Shulman gently touched the throttle of the little machine strapped to his back. Suddenly he wasn't Burt Shulman at all, but Mercury-about-to-become Icarus, a quiet mechanical engineer who was now the match of Captain Marvel or even Wonder Woman. He was running, bounding at 15 or 20 miles an hour, on the road in front of his house and it looked so easy. It didn't seem he was going that fast until a visitor tried to race him. But the machine made Shulman zoom away as though the visitor were standing still.

With the engine off, sitting in his living room overlooking the Hudson River, the 26-year-old Shulman spoke of the many things he had invented: the gadget that blows smoke away from the noses of people who use soldering guns; the alarmclock radio that senses when it is going to snow or rain and wakens the sleeper earlier than usual; the tiny machine designed to help improve the circulation of desk-bound executives by continuously moving their feet up and down; a device permits motorists to breathe fresh air when they are caught in traffic jams, man's jogging machine — ers for the permanent re-moval of ingrown hairs.

But it is the jogging machine that everyone in these parts seems to know about because it can put the three-minute mile within the grasp of even flabby dreamers

'I suppose that I really ought to call it a running machine," said Shulman. "I got the idea after my father bought one of those living room jogging machines. I thought, why not make a machine that would assist somebody who wanted to run outside?"

He took a one-horsepow-er, two-cycle engine, mounted it on an aluminum backpack, the sort worn by hikers, and added a lever that takes the engine's rotary action and provides a pushing action with pads against the thighs. When thigh muscles move that fast, it is relatively easy for calf muscles to keep up.

Shulman is not addicted to jogging but he keeps the machine for his own use and thinks it may have application for some disabled people who could walk if they had such a mechanical aid. The machine doesn't have to propel you quickly; it can work at much speeds

But there seems no imme

Shulman, who earns his living by designing the housing for computer terminals at International Business Machines in Princeton, N.J., sat and looked at a formid-able pile of rejection slips he received from companies that make cars, toys. athletic equipment and other products.

It seems as though the American inventor of yore — the lonely figure who built a better mousetrap in his garage, then made his for-tune by selling it to a manufacturer - is having a rough time of it.

"Getting one's idea mar-keted is almost impossible," said Shulman. "Companies talk of the 'NIH' factor when they receive ideas from the outside. NIH stands for Not Invented Here and they would rather their own engineers created new ideas not outsiders.

Shulman says manufacturers do this because it is far less expensive to pay staff salaries for research and development than to buy ideas from freelancers that can cost millions of dollars Nevertheless, Shulman says he plans to keep inventing things in the hope that some

But recently they were filmed by television cameras, interviewed by scores of journalists and besieged by thou-sands of tourists and pilgrims. The visitors came because a newspaper in Cairo reported that among the bones unearthed during renovation of an ancient chapel were those of John the baptist. of John the paptist.

The monks believe it. They say this monastery has been commemorating the transfer of John's remains to the basement crypt here since it occurred in the 11th century, and that ancient manuscripts in their library said the prophet's remains would be found exactly where the bones eventually turned up.

"This discovery is known to us as a definite thing," said Father Youhanna, the monk appointed to guide journalists around the monastery.

The Coptic Christian hierarchy in Cairo has responded cautiously to reports of the discovery. The patriarch, Pope Shenouda II, appointed a committee of scholars and archeologists to examine the remains and the manuscripts before giving official church sanction to the monks' claim. The committee's task is difficult, because all the bones and skulls that were found — the remains of perhaps a dozen bodies in all - have been jumbled together in a wooden crate. Their age can be determined through carbon dating, experts say, but positive identification is unlikely.

According to the gospels, John was a prophet who came out of the Judean desert to preach and baptize in preparation for the coming of the messiah. St. Matthew describes him as "he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, the voice of one crying in the wilderness," Prepare we the way of the Lord myste his pare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. His message, according to Matthew, was "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

When John reproached King Herod for taking up with his sister-in-law, John was arrested. At Herod's birthday feast his niece, Salome, danced for him and so pleased the king that he promised her whatever favor she wished. Salome, whose mether Hordisc heat the salome is the salome. whose mother Herodias had been angered by John's rebuke, asked for his head, and it was deliverd to her, according to the biblical account.

historical marker puts John's grave near Nablus on the West Bank of the Jordan River. But there are no human remains there.

Tradition holds that John's head was transported to Homs, in Syria, and the rest of his remains spirited out of Palestine to Alexandria during the persecution under the Roman emperor, Julian the Apostate. From Alexandria, the remains are said to have been moved after the Islamic conquest to Egypt to one of the Coptic monasteries in the desert, about the 11th century.

Christianity was brought to Egypt by St. Mark in 61 A.D. The Coptic church split from Rome when the Council of Chalcedon denounced as heresy the doctrine of Monophysitism, which taught that Christ while on earth had but one nature, the divine, rather than a dual nature, divine and human.

Islam overwhelmed Christianity in Egypt in the 18th century, but there are today from 3 million to 6 million Coptic Christians among the country's 40 million people.

The monastery of St. Makarios was founded in 360, one of a group in the desert about 60 miles northwest of Christians that have kept the monastic traditionality. The

The 80 monks of St. Makarios are said to raise the finest Friesan cattle and the biggest turnips in Egypt. It was a reporter-writing about the turnips who first learned of the discovery of the relics, which the monks had kept secret for two years out of fear of just the kind of disruption that is now occurring.

A renovation of the monastery began in 1969 — bringing

JAPANESE RAILWAYS SPEED AHEAD

(Reuter) Japan's state-run railway system has a seemingly inatiable appetite for speed and it is pressing ahead with futuristic designs despite a uge deficit.

Japan National Railways (JNR), which gave the world the Shinkaneen or bullet express service, now is working on what it calls a train for the 21st century, capable of speeds of up to 500 kilometres an hour (310 miles an hour).

A prototype of the streamlined train, which runs without wheels along a raised concrete platform lined with magnets, recently attained a record speed of 347 km/h.

Apart from its speed, a major feature of the design, which is being tested near the southern Japanese city of Niyazaki, is that it is free from noise and vibration one country where smoking is allowed almost everywhere, and cigarette sales rise every year.

Faster trains, particularly between Tokyo and large outlying cities such as Osaka in western Japan, are considered vital for the railway company's survival in face of competition from domestic airlines.

Wile many parts of the world concentrate on banning smoking in public buildings, Spain remains a puffer's paradise, a place to blow smoke in your neighbor's face or even that of the health minister.

"We are not a nation of heavy smokers," insists the government tobacco monopoly Tabacalera Inc., citing annual per capita con-sumption of 1,689 cigarettes, more than 30 packs below what it says is the European average.

But blue smoke somehow seems to crop up almost everywhere in Spain, from the state dinners at King Juan Carlos' palace to the cigarettes dangling from the mouth of Communist leader Santiago Carrillo.

Spaniards, plus the more than 30 million tourists who visit the country each year smoke in stores, taxis, hallways, hospitals and even sometimes in gasoline stations, despite signs prohibiting them from doing so.

With implied advice that no one really should give up smoking altogether, the Tabacalera advises: less, enjoy it more.

The Islands

Greece and the islands, especially Crete and Rhodes, are rapidly becoming the place-dropper's de-light. Greek archeologists worried aloud last summer about the damage those mil-lions of pairs of feet will be doing — are doing already — to the marble stairways that withstood thousands of years of onslaughts by hordes of conquering armies but may yet fall victim to the crepe sole.

Mostly, the Greeks are delighted with the tourist bonanza, and several factors in addition to the obvious attractions - tend to make Greece relatively paradisi-cal from the tourist's standpoint. For although the geo logical fault in northern Greece may not be at its most stable, the govern-ment, since the fall of the junta, is both stable and democratic. So is the drachma. Moreover, for Americans, the drachma is a good buy, a rare phenomenon indeed in these days of plum-met and poor parity. The drachma has stayed some-where close to between 36 and 37 to the dollar for more than a year now, as Greek tourist officials are quick to yesterday.... The Greek tour guides took it all with faint but undisguised disdain.

Everything is marble in Greece. They use it as we use linoleum tiles on floors, for stairs, for tables — not just the tops, either. You know the country is a big marble quarry surrounded by olive trees, but it takes getting used to. Mount Pendeli is just outside Athens. A lot of marble there.

Did Lord Byron deface the Temple of Poseidon at Cape Sounion?

carved into the marble, as each tour guide more or less gleefully points out to each clutch of tourists in as many languages as there are on earth. If the poet didn't do it, he sure is getting some bum rap. Maybe it was that pirate (corsair, was the way the guide put it) who stole the lead that held the pieces of the glistening temple together. Can't trust those

Traffic Jams

Athens is a 24-hour-a-day traffic jam anyway, and in the days preceding the country's October mayoral elec-tions, there was, as often as not, a political rally or demonstration clotting major artery or another. Somebody has suggested that Athens' traffic is the preferred local method of population control. Maybe. but there is some eyidence of a kind of cracking down on offenders. Go through a red light and you can find yourself in jail.

We are informed by Dimitrious, a friendly Chat Tour bus starter with whom we strike up a tad more than the ritual kallymerra-parrakallow relationship, that there is little personal crime in Greece. Crimes of passion. of course, but there was a cabdriver who just found a

Next spring the city, founded by the Romans in the first century, will become a popular floral centre, thanks to a gift of over 65,000 bulbs from the International Flower-Bulb Centre of Hillegom, Hol-land. The Moments Of Boredom Moment By Moment could just possibly one of the worst movies made by a major motion picture studio. It's amazing that a movie with a talented cast (John Travolta and Lily Tomlin) and a hot-shot producer (Robert Stigwood) could bomb this badly. The plot is lacklustre, Travolta is lackadaisical and Tomlin is lacking just about everything.

Writer-director Jane Wagner has put together a boring, trite story about two utterly forgettable human beings. The dialogue is terrible and the acting stilted. The supposedly tender story is so badly done the love scenes are embarrassing to watch and unintentionally funny. It's the stuff a hundred soap operas are made of. The entire movie is a joke, particularly on Robert Stigwood, who has cashed in on Travolta's appeal in Saturday Night Fever and Grease.

A Movie Review By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Travolta has tried to shed his street-tough image in a role that calls for him to become a sensitive drifter who falls in love with Tomlin, a middle-age insomniac Beverly Hills housewife. He's about as dynamic as a soft-boiled egg. To make matters worse, he's been given the ridiculous name Strip.

Tomlin looks like she's on Valium. Her contribution to the movie consists of murmuring 'Strip' over and over again, and making half-hearted animal noises whenever he's in the vicinity. Casting Tomlin as the object of Travolta's sexual fantasies was a mistake. Her lean looks and dry wit are better suited to comedy and character roles. She plays the role straight, but has a difficult time of it. If Tomlin had been allowed to ham it up, the movie would probably be a hit instead of a disaster.

Musings at End of Another Year

invented New Year's and why. It doesn't make much sense really. Looked at through half-closed eyes it's rather like turning the page of a new volume and finding precisely the same layout as in the last, no difference in style and content. So you know before you have turned succeeding pages what you will find there.

The only really good reason for a New Year would be if the human race made an honest attempt to use it as a new beginning; a place to pause and contemplate the failures and mistakes as well as the successes behind them and then to set forth on a new footing, profiting on the hindsight.

But it doesn't work that way. Not for individuals, not for communities and not for nations

In Victoria as elsewhere, 1978 has not been the best year, depending on which standpoint you regard it from. It was a fantastic year for tourists, a bad year for other aspects of the economy. For the arts in this city it was both good and bad, the bad being a situation shared by the arts all over the country and not in their power to control.

It has been good in thecontinuing upsurge of activity as more highly qualified artists arrive, attracted by the steadily growing reputa-tion of UVic's fine arts departments and the Conservatory of Music; by the distinguished colony of graphic artists that has quietly established itself; and by the environment the city provides, which is ideal for this special kind of devel-

Audiences for the city's two professional theatre companies, Bastion and Bel-fry, have been good, both groups chalking up sell-outs and Bastion's season subscriber sale being the best in its history. Special attrac-tions coming to Victoria, aside from such pop events as Rolf Harris, Roger Whittaker and Irish Rovers, have drawn audiences ranging from desultory to poor.

Considering that Victoria has long had a reputation as a dance-conscious city and considering that there are a number of thriving dance studios in the area, it is particularly surprising that Allen Houghton's importa-tion of the Parthenon Dancers of Greece and the Danny Grossman company should have been so thinly attend-

The tightness of the economy may have some bearing but it is also a fact that Victorians are notoriously unventurous in spending their entertainment dollars. Also, they still tend to cling to what is traditional in all the arts, rather than welcoming or even exploring new concepts and styles.

audrey johnson

It would be redundant as tion. Only unyielding re-rell as unkind to discuss solve, conviction and lovalty now the last 12 months' fail-ure of the Victoria Symphony board to cope with and control the multiplying problems of the society. Suf-fice it to say that the present desperate situation could have been avoided if there had been proper foresight and firm policies estab-lished months ago. And to add the hope that the cur-rent board does see clearly where the past mistakes were made and will succeed in turning a new page for

It's a hope not too optimistically voiced at the moment, for the problems are horrendous, particularly with regard to the musicians, many of whom have either left already or will be compelled to leave for sheer economic necessity. And also with regard to a board that appears to be losing members as a dying tree loses its leaves.

What president Dorothy Frost, interim manager Mary Carr and the orchestra don't need at this point is a vacillating board weakened by contention and disaffecsolve, conviction and loyalty on the part of everyone concerned, as well as a willingness to go back to square one and make a totally new start if possible, will save Vic-toria's near-40-year-old orchestra from demise.

For those with keen recollections of musical life in Victoria over the past four decades, there is a touch of sadness as the seventies move to a close. Within a month of each other, a husband and wife who were much identified with the best of musical activity during the 30s, 40s, and 50s passed away, the wife in November, the husband last Monday.

Thelma and Harry Johns were good friends to all mu-sicians, especially helpful to the young and always willing to participate in an interesting venture. A warm and genial couple where hospi-tality was concerned, they sustained for many years a tradition of relaxed infortheir handsome Somass

My first contact with them was as a teen-ager in the mid-1930s when I danced with a ballet group in some operas staged by the Victoria Opera Society of that time. Being also an advanced piano student, I also did some accompanying for rehearsals and, as usual, they showered me with kindness and encouragement.

I particularly remember the production of de Koven's Robin Hood, in which possibly the best known song is Brown October Ale. Harry, as one of Robin's Merry Men, sang that song. The fine musical bass-baritone voice made something almost great out of a jolly drinking song. And he thrilled everyone on stage and off as he wound up with the line "And all my life I'll sing the praise/Of brown October ale," holding the vowel sound on "all" as he circled the full width of the Royal Theatre stage, clink-ing steins with the male cho-

Thelma was the more serious of the two and never ceased to work on her so-prano voice, to devote her-self to her PEO Sisterhood, and serve the musical organizations of the city in several capacities, until age and ill-health intervened. Harry's impish and (to her) slightly risque sense of humor often took her by surprise; she would utter a re-proving "Oh, Harry" and then smile indulgently. One thoroughly enjoyable memory I have of these two wonderfully contributing beings, concerns Thelma's creation of a scripted concert — in other words, a concert dramatized as "An Evening with Johannes Brahms and his Friends."

She called on me (by then, some 15 or so years later, thoroughly involved with theatre) to help her stage the event at the Empress Hotel as a benefit perfor-mance for one of her major interests. The characters in-cluded Brahms, portrayed by the late Edgar Holloway, a well known Victoria or ganist and pianist, Dorothy Gough as Clara Schumann, Thelma and Harry and Grace Timp and others as famous musicians of Brahms' actual acquaint-

It was performed twice to a full ballroom and, cos-tumed and lit, was a popular success as a variation from straight concert stage performance. It was my first experience of directing mature artists and I approached it nervously, but thanks to the total confidence shown in me by Thel-ma and Harry as well as the rest of the cast, it turned into a thoroughly rewarding

The best wish I can make for Victoria's musical population for 1979, is that, fa vored even as it is now by devoted and talented people, still more of the calibre of Thelma and Harry Johns may be bestowed upon us.

He Stood Taller After 'Hamlet'

LONDON (CP) - When the idea was first mooted that Michael Redgrave should play Hamlet, it was dis-missed out of hand by the director, the late Sir Tyrone Guthrie, with the words: "Too tall."

In his first appearance in London as Ferdinand in Love's Labour's Lost at the Old Vic in 1936, audiences were struck by the young Redgrave's physical splen-dor. Extremely tall and well proportioned, he was li kened to a young Greek god by the critics, who also praised his power of mind and capacity for and devo-tion to study.

But Guthrie's verdict as to his qualifications to play Hamlet was accepted as a self-evident truth for a surprising number of years, long after his reputation as an outstanding stage and screen actor was firmly es-tablished. It was due only to his firm determination that he ever did play Hamlet.

When the Shakespeare Memorial Company asked him to play at Stratford-on-Avon, he said he would do so only on condition that at some time during the season he should be allowed to play the melancholy Dane. That was in the early 1950s and even then there was some Finally, Redgrave was allowed to have his way and the result was acclaimed as one of the finest Hamlets of his time.

In his performance, he never accepted that Hamlet was at any time mad. He played him as a splendid prince sorely defeated and accepting his defeat with a quiet and noble resignation.

Like many actors, Red grave was given his first chance in London by John Gielgud, who invited the young actor to join his company at the Queen's Theatre in a season that became leg

He played Bolingbroke in Richard II. The king, over-whelmed with lusciously poetic self-pity, was one of Gielgud's greatest parts and Redgrave's portrayal of Bolingbroke as a man of ac-tion, instant decision and magnificent presence stood out in striking contrast.

Later, Redgrave played Richard himself. The drama is full of lamentation and self-indulgent regret and despair and Redgrave's voice had the required touch of

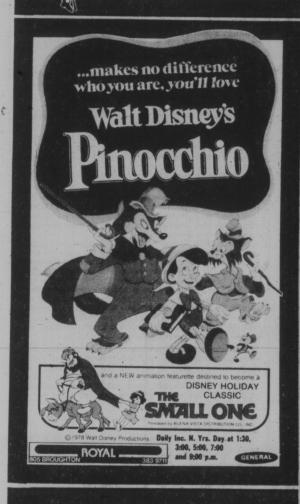

But his stature counterbalainced this and he was unique in his capability of both encompassing the rich sadness of Richard's decline and looking as though he were a man with the ability to crush Wat Tyler's rebel-

With The Lady Vanishes in 1939, he began a most suc-cessful screen career. The Way to the Stars, The Dam Busters and The Browning Version, in all of which he took the principal part, are among the most celebrated of British films.

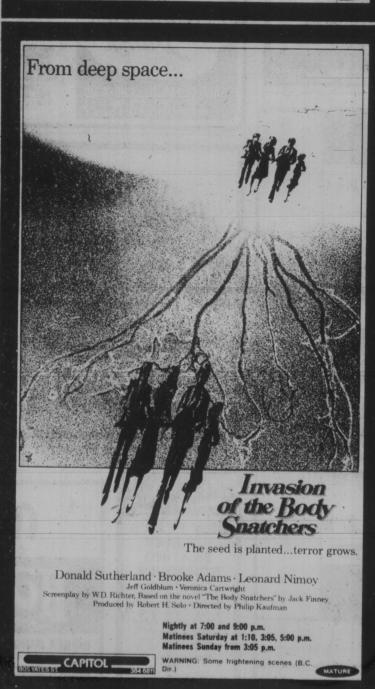

He has also appeared with distinction on television but the theatre remains the art in which he is considered to display his talents to the highest effect.

The Cambridge-educated aetor has also written deeply-considered works on methods of production and acting and has entered into intellectual disputes with critics in which they have not always come off best.

TOKYO — Ugandan President Idi Amin, a former boxer, may fight Japan's popular wrestler Antonio Inoki next June with world heavyweight champion Mo-hammed Ali as referee, it was announced today. Hisa-shi Shinma, manager for the Japanese professional wrestler, said promoter Yoshio Ko of Tokyo is in Uganda to arrange the fight which would take place in that country. In Decision CRTC 78-595 dated August 18, 1978, the Commission authorized the interconnection of the two cable television systems, stating that the result should be the strengthening of the community programming service provided to the residents of both communities. However, the Commission notes that access to the community channel is currently limited exclusively to the Board of Trustees, School District No. 65. In this respect, the licensees are reminded that they are responsible for the programming distributed on the community channel, and that the channel must be accessible to all individuals and groups within their service area.

The Commission directs the licensees to take immediate steps to ensure that use of the community channel does not remain the exclusive privilege of any particular group. Further, the Commission will expect the licensee to develop specific plans for the community channel, and to submit quarterly progress reports until such time as the Commission considers that an acceptable level of service is attained. acceptable level of service is attained

Nov. 29. The snowball had been thrown not by Rossetti but by a friend at another boy. But its impact was apparently more than Nikollaj could bear after months of harassment by neighborhood youths.

In an alley opposite the grocery, five .25-calibre bullets struck Rossetti as he urinated against a wall.

And Nikollaj's subsequent arrest pushed him one step further. Two weeks ago, he vanished while free on $15, 000 bail. Even his lawyer thinks he jumped bail rather than face the consequences of the death.

"His life is now as des-troyed as that of the youth," defence lawyer Murray Richman says. And some thing more died too.

THE GREAT "BOY"

THE GREAT "BOY"

Giovanni Leonardo was born in Calabria, Italy, in 1542. He was sent to Rome to study law but found chess more to his liking and soon attracted public attention by beating all the leading players in Rome. Because of his youthful appearance he was nicknamed "II Puttino" (The Boy).

In 1560, Ruy Lopez, a Spanish priest and chess immortal, visited Rome, and having heard of Leonardo's reputation, sought him out and challenged him. On two successive davs, Lopez beat Leonardo. Disliking defeat, Leonardo went to Naples where he studied chess for two years.

During this time, he learned that his brother had been captured by pirates who were demanding a ransom of 200 crowns. Discovering that the pirate captain played chess, Leonardo challenged him to play for high stakes — and succeeded in not only rescuing his brother but in making quite a sum of money for himself.

Ten years later, he finally went to Madrid to challenge his old rival, Ruy Lopez. King Philip II was present, and when Leonardo won, rewarded him with gold, lewels and furs.

From Spain, the victorious Leonardo went to Portugal, where he beat El Morro, the strongest player at the court of King Sebastian who, like Philip, rewarded him extravagantly and even gave him the title of Knight Errant.

But what had proved a triumphant life ended in a tragic death, for Leonardo had earned not only riches but the enmity of those less giffed. In 1587, aged 45, he was poisoned and died.

DEAR ABBY: Three cheers for your answer to PARENTS who were angry with a doctor for treating their 15-year-old son for VD without telling them. They ought to thank that doctor, not reproach him.

Last summer I thought I had VD. I was only 17 and it was hard enough for me to confess my fears to a doctor, but had it been necessary to tell my parents I wouldn't have gone to a doctor at all. It would have nearly killed my folks, and I just couldn't face them with that kind of problem:

As it turned out, I didn't have VD, but I got a much appreciated lecture and some very good advice from a very understanding doctor. - GRATEFUL GIRL

Hamsters Could Get Cavities

DEAR DR. MILLER: Mother says I shouldn't give candy to Speedy because it will give him cavities. Is this a true fact? Hamsters don't get cavities, do they? I think Mom's just trying to give me the business again about my eating so much candy. I think she doesn't want to come right out and say it because we always fight.

DEAR P. J.: Dental caries (cavities) could occur in a hamster. Candy is not a desirable addition to any pet's diet, including hamsters.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Our last cat'died because he had a sewing needle and thread stuck in his throat. We didn't know what was wrong with him. I made up my mind this wasn't going to happen again. When we got Zap, our new kitten, I taught him to open wide so I could see in his mouth. Lately I've noticed his tongue isn't as pink as it was before. His tongue isn't coated or anything like that, so I don't know if the paleness means anything. — E.M.

DEAR E. M.: A pale tongue is most often an indication of anemia and anemias are common in cats. Your pale pussycat should be seen by the doctor to determine if indeed there is anemia present and, if so, the cause and, of course, to initiate treatment.

While some forms of anemia respond quickly to improved diet and injections of liver and B-complex vita-mins, other forms respond slowly or not at all, depending on the cause. Some types of poisons cause destruction of the red blood cell forming centers in the body, particularly the bone marrow, and these cases respond poorly to treatment. Leukemia is an all-too-frequently found foling disease which cause is an all-too-frequently found feline disease which causes a progressively severe anemia. An occasionally pale nose or tongue may not be significant but permanently pale membranes are a danger signal.

DEAR*DR. MILLER: My 11-year-old son is responsible and very interested. Is he old enough to train a young dog? - L. E

DEAR L. E.: Yes, he may be — barely. You will want to plan on giving him plenty of support and be able to follow through should he lose interest in the project. Remember, it is important for the canine's mental health to know to whom it is responsible. Above all, it mustn't review conflicting orders for silvery and the statement of the canonical statement. rceive, conflicting orders from different "pack" lead-ers. Ideally, one person should train the dog. Anyone else giving commands at any point should use the identical commands for similar situations.

* * * DEAR DR. MILLER: Twice now, my sister-in-law has dropped off her dog with us while she went on a week's vacation. Both times, she gave us elaborate instructions on care of the diet because the dog has this constant diarrhea problem. Both times the dog did have such a problem the first day and night with us. Then he would get over it and be fine no matter what he was fed or wasn't fed until he went back home again. Then, more of the same old prob-lem. The strange thing is even when the dog is fed the same, both at our place and here, it always has these bowel upsets at home and never here. Poodles, the dog, is pretty nervous but very much less with us than at home. Might that have anything to do with it? — C. Y.

DEAR C. Y .: It could have everything to do with it. Re member, most dogs are highly perceptive and pick up on the owner's moods. If the owner is excitable, or upset, the dog is likely to be in the same condition.

While most diarrhea problems are not neurologically induced, some are. (The doctor should determine the cause, of course.)

Evidence has been unearthed to show that gemstones were used for ornamental, utilitarian and ceremonal purposes in North America, even before recorded history. Over twenty gemstones were used by American Indians, including tresh water peafise. Turquoise was widely used in the western part of the continent. Don't be tempted to buy an over-sized room air conditioner. If you've insulated, caulked and weather-stripped your home, you could get by very well with a smaller unit. A smaller one operates almost continuously to dehumidify and cool air. This continuous operation tends to use less elec-tricity than a larger unit that cycles on and off, says one of the largest producers of air conditioners.

I can correct this? MRS. M. B., MONTREAL. If it is any consolation, there are very few knitters who have absolute perfect evenness and tension on both the purl and knit side of stocking-stitch.

From your letter, I would say your knitting problem is serious and needs a drastic remedy. First you will have to determine exactly what you are doing wrong. You are either loosening up on or tightening up on one of the rows. Only by trial can you determine which.

If for instance you are looser on the pure rows are looser on the purl rows, you will have to work them with one size smaller needles maybe even two sizes smaller — to produce the right number of stitches to the inch in width.

On the other hand, if one of the rows indicates you are tighter on tension, produc-ing too many stitches to the inch, you will have to us one size larger needles for the row which is at fault. I agree that stocking-stitch has to be beautifully smooth to achieve a look of perfection. This week's pattern fea-tured neat-tailored cardi-gans in children's sizes for casual wear on chilly winter

Dear Mrs. F.

There has been an upsurge in interest in the relation-ship between a deficiency of zinc (a mineral) and the acuteness of taste. Studies on this problem are being done in an interesting way.

Zinc supplements to diets are being tried in dosages of bout 15 milligrams a day. It has been found that the zinc concentration in hair is increased in patients who have been trying this. This is one of the ways of determining the absorption of zine in Every year, some 5,000 young women like the girl with the fuzzy hair walk off the street into the Ford reception room trying to break into one of the toughest, most disciplined most disciplined, most glamorous professions in the city: the fashion photogcity: the fashion photographer's model.

It is a thriving industry, which this year expects to bring in about $25 million in model's bookings. The listed price for some of the top models has recently risen to $1.000 a day.

In addition, a new category has been created of models whose fees are negotiated according to a particular job. Although the agencies are reluctant to talk about these rates, which are commanded by maybe 20 models in all, they reportedly go as high as $1,500 a edly go as high as $1,500 a

Until last year, the New York modelling world was virtually controlled by four agencies. They watched each other warily, competed fiercely but respected each other's territory.

Then John Casablancas, head of the leading modelling agency in Europe, arrived on the scene, flung aside the conventions and began to woo top models away from the established agencies. The agencies responded by suing him for more than $10 million. It became referred to within the industry as the "model JOHN CASABLANCAS, head of Europe's leading modelling agency, sparked what the industry calls "model wars," when he arrived in New York and sablanca's presence has had on the industry here.

"He has introduced the Paris way of doing things," says Wilhelmina, who runs Wilhelmina Models, one of the leading agencies:

"As a result, the attitude of the model has changed. She is now picking or choose."

She is now picking or choosing who she wants to work for, instead of just taking what her agency tells her to. That has never been done here before except force. here before, except for an occasional obnoxious super-star. It tends to make the business less professional."

Although there are models who do runway work or tele-vision commercials, the ne plus ultra of the modelling business is working as a photographer's model—either for fashion pages or for advertisements in fashion magazines of catalogues.

There are now about 600 women doing this kind of work, of which some 200 can be considered the real pro-fessionals. In addition, there are about 300 male models in what is one of the fastest-growing aspects of the industry.

Models are promoted by agencies, who circulate their pictures, make bookings for them and take commissions of 15 to 20 per

The five leading agencies are Ford, founded by Eileen and Jerry Ford 32 years ago; Wilhelmina, founded in 1867 Wilhelmina, a former Ford superstar, and her husband, Bruce Cooper; Elite, Casablanca's agency+ Stewart, founded by Stewart

Cowley and now headed by Dorian Leigh, and Zoli Models, founded by Zoltan Rendessy seven years ago.

There are countless other agencies but it is these five who set the prices and control the business.
One of the things that the traditional agencies agree on is that while fashion changes, the kind of model they look for remains the same — tall, slender, classical young women with good cal young women with good bone structure and facial planes the camera will love.

planes the camera will love. The criteria, they say, for selecting black models and white models are the same.

Casablancas disagrees that the requirements for a model are what they were five or 10 years ago. He says he looks for models who are more sensual than traditional New York models.

"There has been a major revolution in looks," he says. "There isn't just a look anymore. My girls have more feminine looks. They have busts, hips, shape."

One thing that doesn't change is the size of the models. This has nothing to do with beauty, but with the do with beauty, but with the fact that designers make clothes in certain limited sizes — size 8 and 10 — means the models must be able to step into them with-

able to step into them without special fittings.

Generally speaking, models weigh 10 pounds less than normal for their height because the camera adds 10 pounds. A high fashion model is from 5 feet, 8 inches tall (an absolute minimum of 5 feet, 7 inches) to 5 feet, 9½ inches (Elite will go up to 5 feet, 11 inches).

The average weight is 115

The average weight is 115 to 120 pounds. Busts are 33 to 34 inches, waists 22 to 24 inches and hips 33 to 35 inches. Junior models are somewhat smaller, but no shorter than 5 feet, 7 inches.

The lucrative part of the business is modelling for mail-order catalogues or for cosmetic advertisements.

Most good models earn $100 an hour or $750 a day. This does not include, of course, those in that very top category who can command $1,000 a day or more for a st.000 a day or more for a particular job. It is possible for models to make upward of $100,000 and as much as $250,000 a year, although few can cope with that gruelling a schedule.

The most outstanding characteristic of a top model is probably her self-discipline. She watches her diet and her sleep and cares for her body in the same meticulous manner a mechanic cares for a high-

In Europe, it's looser, more relaxed. Many photog-raphers and models would rather work there because, they say, European fashion magazines are more imaginative and more creative. But the money is here and many models cross back and forth between the two mod-elling worlds as frequently as businessmen cross town to conduct their business.

The ultimate enemy of the model is age. And with age comes evanesence, although there are top models who have careers of 10 to 15

"The girls who are aging, of course they are inse-cure," says Zoli. There are some who have said all along, 'I know this isn't going to last.' But there are other girls who are com-pletely oblivious of it."

Some models amass tens of thousands in savings. Others make plans.

Then there are those who never think about the future. "There are so many girls who don't look reality in the face," says Eya Malm-strom. "They don't want to think about tomorrow. It's very sad."

work or the state of the state

By Rev. J. A. Davidson

If some of you church members have found that recently your pastor has become noticeably bossier than he used to be, do not be unduly alarmed: he may simply be testing some of the lessons he learned from a new book. Pastoral Assertiveness: A New Model for Pastoral Care. After all, even a humble pastor has the right to indulge in achieve assertiveness training one of the little assertiveness-training, one of the newer fads in the

A few days ago I saw an advertisement for this book in a religious periodical, and the general heading. "Pastor Power", appealed to something deep within me. I learned that I can be taught "how to use authoritativesness for healing and sustaining... and for raising money, managing meetings, recruiting, and other church-related tasks." And it promises me "daily guidance for converting a passive ministry into one that is foreaful recreasive into one that is foreaful recreasive. passive ministry into one that is forceful, responsive, and

Were I younger I might order a copy, but with me facing retirement just five years from next summer I don't wish to increase my aggressiveness all that much: probably I could be more responsive and responsible, but I don't think my system could take very much more forceful-

I must admit, though, that I have mixed feelings about pastoral assertiveness. In recent years we pastors have been told that should function as "enablers", "facilitators". "resourcists", "playing coaches", and such. Those labels don't ring much with assertiveness and aggressiveness; actually, they seem to have undertones of namby-pambyness. No wonder some of us are suffering indentity crises. I wonder, though, if we should turn our backs on the biblical image of the pastor as a chaptered water.

biblical image of the pastor as a shepherd and try to take the image of a mule driver who must crack the whip from time to time. But there are dangers in the shepherd image: we must not come to think that the main job of the pastor as shepherd is to tell the sheep dogs what to do, along with spending a good deal of time repairing the fences of the fold—although there are elements of those in effective pastoral leadership. (All this, reminds me of a Sponnerism, which may come from the form the following a Spoonerism, which may come from Dr. Spooner him-self: "Sheep will always follow a shoving leopard".)

A nice instance of pastoral assertiveness is the state-ment of an English vicar I read about a few years ago. He announced that he would refuse to marry couples who were more than five minutes late for weddings at his church: he said of such shameful tardiness, "It is not only inconvenient for me, but also a grave discourtesy to God."

On the other hand there is the warning given by the American theologian, Paul W. Hoon: "The sloth of the congregation is often in ratio to the authoritarinism

BONN, West Germany -An Olympic-class East Ger-man athlete who defected to the West last year claims that she was forced into tak-ing fperformance-boosting drugs by her former trainer in East Berlin.

The statement by 20-year-old Renate Neufeld — a sprinter who had been, until late last year, in training with the East German team being assembled for the 1980 Olympics — marks the first time that a major East Ger-man athlete has spoken out on the alleged use of hormone drugs to bring home medals for her country.

East German athletes, especially the women, have achieved extraordinary suc-cesses in the last few Olympic games, outperforming countries — including) he United States in the 1976 games — with far larger populations. This has touched off continuing allegations in the West of widespread use of drugs by the East Germans; claims that are repeatedly denied by East German Communist Neufeld, in an interview with the West German Sports News Service pub-lished here Thursday, said her trainer for the T.S.C. Sports Club in East Berlin first ordered her to begin taking hormone tablets when she was 18, as prepara-tions began for the 1977 summer season. She said she refused at first but later agreed under threat of variagreed under threat of various reprisals.

The sprinter — a short-distance specialist who had helped the club win the East German national junior 400 meter relay title in 1976 — said she was given two different tables have ferent tablets two or three times a day for two week periods, a cycle which was repeated after 10-day

Neufeld told the sports agency that she developed painful and odd side effects including a painful harden-ing of her leg muscles that sometimes caused difficulty in walking, occasional loss of her voice, a thin growth of hair on her upper lip and like other female members of her club — frequent missing of her menstrual cycle. By May 1977, she said, she refused to take any more pills because of the side effects and was not permitted to see a doctor outside the club. Instead, the club doctor ordered psychotherapy, she claimed in the inter-

The athlete said her troubles were increased when she refused to apply for-membership in the ruling Socialist Unity Party of Communist East Germany. She claims the training money she received as a member of the Olympic squad was withdrawn and that her trainer said this was just a warning. "If I did not basically change my attitude, neither outstanding sports performances nor a good education would be any help. Instead I would soon be sweeping a factory floor or, at best, be standing behind a factory bench," she said she was told.

By the fall, Neufeld claimed, she had been taken by 'plainclothes secret service men to a police building for interrogation several times. After that, she decided to defect. She went to Bulgaria on a vacation, linked up with her Bulgarian boyfriend, who is now her husband, and slipped into West Germany from Bul-garia late last year.

She said she brought out with her samples of the two types of tablets she was given in the East, and the sports agency said these had been analyzed by Prof. Manfred Donike of the West German Sports Federation as anabolic steroids.

Neufeld said she decided to speak out now because her father, an English teacher in East Berlin, has lost his job since her defection and a sister, a talented handball player, was expelled from her sports school and club for the same reason.

Neufeld now lives near Munich with her husband and their 2-month-old baby Reached by telepho Thursday morning, she said she could confirm every-thing that appeared in the interview but declined to elaborate further. She said her claims applied only to what she knew about her own sports club and its members and she didn't claim detailed knowledge of what goes on elsewhere in East German sports. In East Berlin, Reuters news agency reported that a spokesman for Neufeld's former club denied her claims. "It is not the practice here that athletes are forced to take anything. the spokesman was quoted as saying. "She must have

THE JAMES BAY STORY:

Out of the Grey Mud, Rich Economic Fallout

By ANDREW MALCOLM JAMES BAY (NYT) — The water has already begun to gather in the first reservoir. By this time next year, the dikes will be in rivers in new beds. And then the power — an enormous outpouring of hydro power — should start surging south to Montreal and even to New York, 1,300 miles away.

For the staggering price of $15.1 billion, much of it raised in New York's capital raised in New York's capital markets, Quebec Hydro, the provincial power authority, has been able to move well along with the huge hydroelectric project, one of history's largest and costliest building efforts.

By 1985, La Grande Complex alone will be generating about 10.3 million kilowatts much capacity as the entire province commands today. And that is just the begin-ning. Experts estimate that another 25 million kilowatts potential hydroelectric power remain to be tapped in this isolated northern cor-

With the price of oil ex-pected to raise again in com-ing weeks, Quebecers, who have become the Arabs of electricity, are counting on their hydroelectric riches to help reduce their independence on costly oil imports.
Officials of the provincial government plan for electricity to provide more than 40 per cent of Quebec's total energy needs by 1990, compared with about 24 per cent today.

Since Quebec's peak ele-tric demands come during the bitter winters, this plan frees considerable amounts of power for export to the United Sates, where peak demand comes in summer. Actually, Canada, which gets 74 per cent of its electricity from cheaper hydro-electric projects, has exported power to the United States since the turn of the century. Last year this nation sent 20.2 billion kilo-watt-hours south, while American utilities sold an-other 4 billion kilowatt hours to Canada.

Huge public construction works have traditionally been major factors in the economic development of Canada's vast area, where the frontier still starts not too many miles north of the big cities. The James Bay project, which involved building five airfields and a major highway across 450 miles of swamps just to reach the work site, is the latest example. The economic fallout of such spending spreads well beyond this construction camp mired in

The arrival of electricity and civilization (albeit a civilization often housed in mobile homes) is expected to spur development of the region's other untapped re-sources. Fresh from other dam work in Pakistan and Egypt, giant diesel trucks growl. across work sites reachable by land only on ice roads in winter. The dam at this site is by itself almost two miles across. It requires 30 million cubic yards of carefully layered fill, which cost $8 a yard; cement would have been $65 a yard.

Last month, this dam began forming the body of water that will become Quebec's largest lake, 35 miles across and 75 miles long. It will contain enough water to supply Montreal for 96 years. Scientists estimate years. Scientists estimate that the lakes will moderate the surrounding area's high and low temperatures by an average of three degrees.

Nearby, 450 feet under-ground, at the end of a half-mile road blasted through granite, workers toil in a huge man-made cav-ern. Reasonable Resolutions as December draws to a close because there is no problem in choosing a subject. The theme can always be New Year resolutions, those statement we repeat every year and promptly

New Year resolutions are the theme for this column, the resolutions of the home The men were arrested gardener's resolutions are not made to be discarded a week later

The gardener's resolutions are definite plans, carefully considered flexible because of the many conditions over which we have control, but plans to be implemented rather than

No matter how carefully we plan our garden work we are always at the mercy of the weather. We project into the future with no guarantee that conditions will be suitable for the work we propose to accomplish

Therefore our plans have to be flexible. If the work cannot be done in April, the plan has to be adjusted to fit in with the normal work for

May. This is not always an easy the plan has to be shelved for a later opportunity, or even for another year. To some this causes a ing to a negative resolution that planning in advance is a useless waste of time. The experienced home gardener sccepts these re-verses knowing they are likely to occur and realizing that nature has no respect for man's clocks and calendars. Our critics, the non-gar-fail to put them into practice. They accuse us of pro-crastinating.

It is not difficult to assess another gardener's prob-lems and suggest a logical procedure, but it is another matter when the problems are our own. Where would be the best place to start? What time of year are we likely to get most done? Should we progress a piece at a time or rip up everything and start from scratch?

Our delay in starting is not procrastination, but a mass of minor problems we feel must be straightened out before the final plan can be tackled.

The only solution I have found is to get started. I feel sure the start will be made in the wrong place and changes will be needed, but once the job is under way the puzzle pieces quickly fall into place and the picture becomes clear.

Our mental approach to gardening is just as impor-tant as making detailed

We tend to forget that gardening for us is a spare-time occupation. Because of this, we have to condition our-selves to the physical labor each spring, unless our daily work involves the digging of ditches or shovelling of Gardening should be looked upon primarily as a pleasant part-time hobby, pursued for relaxation and reasonable exercise in the open air. When the mind and body is relaxed a surprising amount of work can be ac-complished in one hour without any physical dis-

If there is one resolution every home gardener should make and keep, it is to strive for relaxation of body and mind. Whichever comes-first will increase the capa-bilities of the other, and plans can be carried out with the minimum of fatigue and the maximum of satisfac-

There is a certain amount of work in gardening we have to accept whether we like it or not. Weeding, transplanting, cultivating, and watering has to receive our attention if our plants are to succeed. With a sensi-ble approach these become minor jobs which give much pleasure.

One important point to be remembered by home vegetable gardeners is that we are not farmers endeavoring to grow as many crops as possible from a given field and to remove them to mar-ket ahead of competitors to obtain the greatest returns.

home gardener's market is the needs of the family. In the main, those needs are for a good assortment of vegetables every week plus a few crops for storage or processing. Quality comes before quantity.

Small sowings 10 to 15 days apart are sufficient; transplanting just enough seedlings at one time from seed bed to open row to give a two-week supply; sowing a full fall vegetable garden in mid-July and concentrating on those vegetables which can be left in the ground over winter and gathered as needed. This is the approach that eliminates unnecessary losses, provides the family needs and keeps labor to a minimum.

Let the other fellows make their high-blown New Year resolutions, while we gardeners make reasonable plans that are possible of Practise relaxation when gardening. Make gardening pleasurable as well as

And we wish you every success in reaching these two goals in the coming year!
